

from the city hall.

Bloomington Square is between the Eighth and Ninth avenues and Fifty-third and Fifty-seventh streets. It is upon high ground, and when regulated, will be one of the finest public resorts in the city. It contains 17 acres. Its distance from the city hall is four miles.

Manhattan Square, also between the Eighth and Ninth avenues, and bounded by Seventy-seventh and Eighty-first streets, is yet in a rough state. It is five miles from the city hall.

Mount Morris, near Harlem, is a rocky elevation in the centre of a public square between One hundred and twentieth and One hundred and twenty-fourth streets, and extending on each side of the Fifth avenue. Neither the avenue nor the streets are yet opened.

A public house on the summit of Mount Morris is a place of great resort during the summer. From its observatory, the spectator has a fine view of the surrounding scenery, including Long Island, with Astoria and Flushing on the southeast; Harlem, Morrisania, Mottville, and Manhattanville, on the north; and west, the Palisades of the Hudson; and southward, the spires of the city, and the highest points of Staten Island.

There is a scheme now under consideration, that a large park shall be made and that the city should appropriate for the purpose a tract of land, seven hundred and sixty acres in extent, situated in the centre of the island; bounded by the Fifth avenue on the east, Eighth avenue on the west, Sixtieth street on the south, and One hundred and sixth street on the north. This tract is two miles and a quarter in length, about half a mile wide, and five miles and a half in circumference. If it is laid out in the manner proposed, it will contain a serpentine road, twenty-five miles in length; also "the proposed new reservoir—a picturesque, irregularly shaped artificial lake"—ten times as large as Washington square, (it will be a mile and a half in circumference,) in one placid sheet. The cost of the land, if purchased speedily, will be not far from a million of dollars. If the scheme is adopted, New York will possess the largest, the most beautiful, and the most various park in the world. Hyde Park, in London, will be only half as large, and not half as attractive. Situated in the centre of the island, and bounded on one side by the Fifth avenue, it will, of course, be surrounded by the most costly edifices both public and private. It will affect so vast an extent of property, that the mere rise in value of the land upon its borders will more than pay its first cost. Besides the serpentine drive, twenty-five miles long, the Central Park will contain fields large enough for the whole military force of New York—cavalry, artillery and infantry—to manœuvre in one body, and for all the cricket-clubs in the vicinity, to play at the same time, and for all the moveable population of the three cities to look on and see the sport. The hundred-acre, picturesque lake will accommodate, upon its ample surface, thousands of skaters in winter, as the shady walks upon its banks will afford verge enough for thousands of strollers in summer. In expatiating upon the many advantages and beauties which the palings of the future park will enclose, the aldermen become eloquent:—"Continuing to rise, gradually winding around elevations through gentle valleys, the serpentine road will reach the top of Harlem Heights, at about One hundred and fifth street, having attained the highest land upon the island, south of Fort Washington, and from which a magnificent view is presented on every side. From this point may be seen nearly all the present city, lying to the south, and the bay beyond it; the intervening district rapidly improving to the southern margin of the park, and when it is finished, the park itself extending from its southern border two miles to the feet of the beholder, intersected by beautiful artificial lakes of various sizes; by small streams, crossed by numerous marble or rustic bridges; by beautiful groves of trees of every variety, indigenous and exotic; by serpentine roads winding through velvet lawns, decorated with sparkling fountains, and the whole surrounded by architectural works of every order and variety."

Youth and Age.

The following beautiful lines originally appeared in the Etonian, a periodical started about twenty years ago, by the boys of Eaton College. For truth, tenderness and melody they are incomparable:

I often think each tottering form
That limps along in life's decline,
Once bore a heart as young as mine,
As full of idle thoughts as mine;
And each had its dream of joy,
Its own unequalled pure romance;
Commencing when the blushing boy
First thrills at lovely woman's glance,
And each could tell his tale of youth,
Would think its scenes of love evince
More passion, more unearthly truth,
Than any tale before or since.
Yes! they could tell of tender lays,
At midnight poured in classic shades,
Of days more bright than modern days—
And made more fair than modern maid.
Of whispers in a willing ear,
Of kisses on a blushing cheek;
Each kiss, each whisper, far too dear,
Our modern lips to give or speak,
Of passions too untimely crossed;
Of passions slighted or betrayed—
Of kindred spirits early lost,
And buds that bloom but to fade;
Of beaming eyes and tresses gay,
Elastic form and noble brow,
And forms that have all passed away,
And left them what we see them now!
And it is thus—human love!
So very light and frail a thing!
And must youth's brightest visions move
Forever on Time's restless wing?
Must all the eyes that still are bright,
And all the lips that talk of bliss,
And all the forms so fair to sight,
Hereafter only come to this?
Then what are earth's best visions worth,
If we at length must lose them thus?
If all we value most on earth
Ere long must fade away from us!

Dabster says he would not mind living as a bachelor, but when he comes to think that bachelors must die—that they have got to go down to the grave "without anybody to cry for them"—it gives him a chill that frost-bites his philosophy. Dabster was seen on Tuesday evening going down to a milliner. Putting this fact to the other, we think we "smell something," as the fellow said when his shirt took fire.

A JUDGE IMPRISONED.—A select committee of the Wisconsin Legislature have recommended the removal from office of Judge Levi Hubbell, for high crimes and misdemeanors. The charges against him involve a most extraordinary amount of moral turpitude.

SECRETARIES: D N Barrows, of Hinds; G S McMillan, of Smith; M G Lewis, of Tishomingo; John Marshall, Warren.

On motion of Mr Phelan of Monroe, the chair appointed Messrs Phelan, Briggs and Mabry a committee to inform the Hon. W R Cannon of his election as President, who, on taking his seat, addressed the Convention as follows:

BROTHER DEMOCRATS:—For this most unexpected manifestation of unmerited kindness and confidence, please accept my unfeigned thanks. I would that the duties had devolved on a wiser head. And now that we are again assembled in accordance with the time honored usages of the Democratic party to sit in counsel together, let us come up to the duties assigned us, by those who bad us "kindle again the council fires," and with the lights before us, select such standard-bearers in the approaching contest, as will faithfully and zealously carry out our long cherished principles. How shall an object so desirable be accomplished; How shall we select among friends equally worthy and patriotic, and yet neither wound them, or forfeit our own self-respect? Simply, my companions, by cultivating that harmony and forbearance, without which no party organization can long endure, or achieve any thing either commendable or useful.

At the time of our last biennial assemblage, dissensions and heart-burnings of no ordinary character unfortunately existed, the asperities of which were none the less fostered during the canvass which followed thereafter. All parties, however, by common consent, agreed to refer the grounds of difference to those who alone in our happy form of government, had a right to act as arbiters in the matter, namely, the People in their sovereign capacity. The issue was presented in September 1851. In November thereafter, the exponent of the peculiar views of each section of our State, met in this Hall, and agreed on the terms of settlement. Upon those terms, the People and the Press, from the Tennessee line to the Gulf coast, cried out, "it is finished," our strife shall end, and our differences are hushed.

Within the past year the Democratic party reorganized on the broad platform of cherished party lines, and was gallantly borne through the most perfectly overwhelming political triumph, ever achieved since the formation of this glorious Republic. And shall we, while canvassing the claims of our neighbors and fellow-citizens for State offices, be less just and forbearing, or love our principles less? No verily. We should institute no invidious distinction by geographical limits, but endeavor to give to each section its due proportion, and mete out to each aspirant for office, such an allotment as a majority of disinterested friends shall in their wisdom deem most proper.

Thanks to our venerated forefathers for a system of government which knows no distinction or class in society, but where all alike may aspire to official munificence. But of necessity in such a struggle, some must be less fortunate than others, since all cannot fill official stations at the same time; but it is the duty of such, after a choice has been made, to submit with dignity and grace to the will of the majority when fairly expressed, feeling satisfied to bide their time.

Already do we see indubitable evidences of firm and zealous opposition from those who differ with us in political sentiment. To this we do not object, believing that an honest difference is often salutary, and we feel bound to respect the firm maintenance of such disagreements by every one who is entitled to the proud appellation of freemen. But we are not to lose sight of the fact, that we should be prudent and discreet, lest our opponents achieve the victory.

With the confident belief that you will do right, and relying upon your forbearance to aid me in an honest desire impartially to perform the delicate duties assigned me, I cheerfully submit all to the guidance of your superior wisdom.

On motion of Captain Blythe of Lowndes, the following resolution was adopted, to-wit:

Resolved, That a committee of five, from each Congressional District, and one from the State at large, be appointed by the chair, to draft resolutions for the consideration and adoption of this Convention, and that all resolutions offered in this Convention be referred to said committee to be reported upon, without debate.

TUESDAY, May 4, 1853.

The Convention met at 9 o'clock.

A. K. Blythe of Lowndes, from the committee on resolutions, reported as follows:

The committee appointed to report resolutions for the consideration of the Convention, beg leave to report, that they deem it unnecessary, at this time, again to elaborate, in separate resolves, the fundamental doctrines of the Democratic party; but simply recommend the re-adoption of the platform of principles set forth by the convention of our party, which assembled at Baltimore in June, 1852.

Capt. Blythe also offered the following additional resolution:

Resolved, That this convention has observed with heartfelt gratulation the unity of sentiment and principle which animated the Democratic party in the election of our present chief Magistrate of the United States, and that we recognise in him so far as his past and developing sentiments and actions indicate, a stern integrity and fixed purpose to administer the government in strict conformity to the constitution, in rigid observance of the rights of the States, and as we believe in great honor to himself, and in advancement of the true interests of the country.

On motion the report and resolution were received.

Mr. Kinyon, of Tishomingo, from the minority of the same committee, made the following report which was also received:

The undersigned minority of the committee charged to report resolutions for the consideration and adoption of this convention, beg leave to submit the following preamble and resolutions as a substitute, to-wit:

WHEREAS, a temporary estrangement of Democrats has existed in the party in this State growing out of honest differences of opinion, which by the action of the late National Democratic convention and election of Gen. Pierce President, and W. R. King Vice President of the United States, and especially the Inaugural address of President Pierce, the views and principles of which we highly, fully and cordially approve, said differences have become altogether impracticable and inapplicable.

AND WHEREAS, no democrat should, or ought to be proscribed on account of such former differences, but should be met with the most entire good faith upon the basis of said Inaugural address as a just and proper emanation from the principles of the resolutions of said late National democratic convention.

AND WHEREAS, the democracy of this State should be organized upon a solid and self-sustaining basis, looking to complete harmony internally, and to an impregnable wall of external defence.

Now therefore to accomplish said ends:

Be it Resolved, That of the six officers for which nominations are to be made by this convention, the delegates known as State rights democrats shall be entitled to nominate three alternately taking or giving the initiative at their option and the delegates known as Union democrats to the three other alternative nominations, the nominations to commence with the office of Governor and to conclude with the nomination of a member to Congress for the State at large; and when the nominations are thus made all of the same should be unanimously ratified by the convention and be supported without distinction.

Resolved, 2nd, That such action will be an unmistakable pledge of good faith that said differences aforesaid are extinguished, and that from this time forward we shall know and recognise each other only by the time-honored name of democrats, without any appellation of Union or State rights or otherwise.

Resolved, 3rd, That true hearted democrats know of no sacrifice too great to be made, if necessary for their time-honored and time-enduring principles as enunciated by the resolutions of the National Democratic Convention and the Inaugural address of President Pierce, which is hereby endorsed and approved in its entirety.
